The Talk Continues

Cal State Fullerton's video series "The Talk: A Journey Toward Anti-Racism" is expanding further with the launch of its next chapter, which features eight Titans talking about anti-racism through the lens of their multiple identities. The video series invites campus and community members to talk about their anti-racism journeys. The series debuted after the summer of 2020 protests and calls for action after the death of George Floyd.

Computer Engineering Grads Dream Up Creative, Real-World Senior Projects

Computer engineering graduates designed and built the prototype Titan ROV, a remotely-operated underwater vehicle that marine researchers can use to explore the ocean. In addition, golfers might revel in a novel system that retrieves golf balls. Baseball fans and players could benefit from a technology-based or "smart" contraption that eliminates bad umpire calls. These are some of the creative inventions Class of 2022 computer engineering graduates designed for their capstone senior projects.

Titans in the Spotlight

Alumni Association's 2022 Outstanding Senior Award Recipient

Add together a drive for academic excellence, a dedication to research and a passion for uplifting fellow Titans — and the sum is Madeline Ceccia. Since she was in middle school, Ceccia has dreamt of becoming an engineer in the aerospace industry. Graduating summa cum laude with her bachelor's degree in applied mathematics, she is on her way to reaching her goals. She begins her new job this June as a systems engineer for Raytheon Intelligence & Space.

Alumni Association's 2022 Outstanding Graduate Student Award

When Marisol Rivera was 15 years old, both of her parents were deported to Tijuana, Mexico. Since then, she has worked to transform her pain into a powerful example for her two younger siblings, who she officially adopted when she turned 17. A first-generation student, Rivera navigated many struggles while earning a bachelor's degree in 2020 and a master's degree this spring. Her next goal is a career in political advocacy, specifically looking in education or nonprofit organizations that “help foster kinder relationships in society by exposing largely neglected histories, unsung heroes and heroines, and cultivating a curriculum that reflects our rich and diverse society,” said Rivera.
